

ECON 442 : Advanced Macroeconomic Analysis

A study of Advanced economic issues related to the economy as a whole. Topics include gross national product, national income, consumption, investment, inflation, and economic growth. Students will examine the issues in the context of current domestic and global economic policies.

Credits 3

CIP Code

45.0601

Prerequisites

(LIBR 150 may be taken concurrently).

Prerequisite Courses

ECON 312

LIBR 150

Course Outcomes

After successfully completing the course, the learner will be able to:

- An understanding of the core principles of macroeconomics and the application of these principles to explaining aggregate economic outcomes and human behavior in everyday situations.
- An understanding of the economic way of thinking and the ability to apply the economic way of thinking to everyday decisions..
- An understanding of the methodology of economics and its limitations.
- An understanding of what makes economies grow over time and how this leads to increases in the standard of living for individuals
- An understanding of the role of diversity in macroeconomics as well as the differences in the impact of policies and outcomes based on genders, races and socioeconomic status.